Biography

For DJ Matthew C, a good night is measured by how many phones stay in pockets. The Italian DJ and producer builds his sets and tracks around one goal: getting people to stop filming, look at each other and dance.

That conviction comes from experience. He started DJing in 2014 and spent years playing private parties and weddings, where audiences of every age share the same floor. Those nights taught him to read a room, adapt on the fly and see how music can pull very different people into the same moment. After stepping away for a while, he returned in 2026 with a fresh mindset and began producing his own music.

His productions sit between Progressive House and Tech House. Driving basslines and punchy electronic drums keep the tracks on the dancefloor, while melodic lines and atmospheric textures give them room to breathe. He draws on the melodic festival energy of Martin Garrix, the crowd-focused Tech House of FISHER and the big emotional peaks of Swedish House Mafia.

Freedom, shared energy and living in the moment run through everything he makes. For him, a set has done its job when people leave with a memory they'll talk about later. He doesn't take himself too seriously: the music is about fun and positive energy.

DJing is still his first love, but production is now central to the project. Next up: taking his sets from private events to clubs and festivals in Italy and, in time, abroad, and releasing more original tracks.
